between the Knickerbocker and the Gotham teams.

In the early days runs were called "aces" and a team had to make 21 to have enough to win. Rule one of the early set of rules, copies of which have been preserved, says that all players "must be punctual and observe the time for the commencement of the game" This precaution was necessary because in those days no bases on balls were possible and it was not uncommon for the pitcher to throw for half an hour before the batter decided to strike.

Very few changes in the basic principles of the game as set forth in the original twenty rules, made in 1845 have been made. In rule two of the original set it is provided that "before the commencement of the game the president shall appoint an umpire who shall keep the game in a book and note all the violations of the rules" and rule seventeen states that there shall be no appeal from the umpire's decision in case of a dispute. In 1848 a rule making it necessary for a player to be touched out" was added to decision in case of a dispute. In 1848 a rule making it necessary for a player to be touched out" was added to the original code and at this time sliding to the bases made its appearance of the changes were made from time to time making the principles of the game the same as they stand today. Beginning with the Knickerbecker and Gotham clubs other organisations sprung into being and a pioneer convention of baseball clubs, was held in May, 1857. The next year twenty five clubs sent delegates to New York and "The National Association of Baseball Players" was formed.

In the late fifties the game spread to Buston; Portland, Maine took up the pastime in 1858 and Buffalo and Rochester. New York followed. Chicago started the game in 1856 and two years later was playing match games with Milwaukee.

When the game spread to San Francisco in 1859 it developed into a wild sport. Professional gamblers who infested the Pacific coast town in the early days bet heavily on the games, according to historical accounts, and the "spectators" were in the habit of shooting off revolvers when a fielder was about to catch the ball.

Records show that New Orleans became interested in baseball in 1860, then the Civil war put a stop to the sport temporarily but the soldiers in the camps played and writers say the war had a great deal to do with the with Milwaukee.

war had a great deal to do with the spread of the sport over the entire country.

In 1867 the Savannah team, accompanied by a band and rooters, went to Charleston to play for the championship of the South, it is chronicled. Harvard University combined with the town boys in 1865 and organized the first college baseball team. Later Tufts and Yale followed. In 1864 and 65 the "Atlantics" of Brooklyn, won all their games and held undisputed title until 1866 when the Philadelphia Athletics stepped in and handed the champions a defeat. The two teams played before a crowd estimated at 30,000 on October 1, 1866 and the Athletics won 31 to 12.

It was considered a disgrace to take money for playing in the early days but in 1866 three members of the Brooklyn team were given $10 a week for playing. This, according to historians was the turning point in the game toward professionalism. The first professional team is credited to Rockford. III. where Al G. Spalding or Anized the "Forest City" team. To Harry Wright, who went to Cincinnati in 1867 from the Washington Nationals, writers give the credit for importing non-residence players for his team.

by 1874 professional, amateur, and semi-professional clubs had sprung up all over the country and baseball truty became the national sport. In 1875 the "Association of Baseball Players" expelled the Chicago club for refusing to play a return game, and thereupon, histories say, Spalding and McVey and some other Boston players jumped to Chicago. The Spalding revolution is given as the reason for the formation of the National League in 1876. The newly formed National League in 1876.
